Credit reporting bodies may include your credit information in reports that they provide to credit providers to assist those providers to assess your credit worthiness.

Credit reporting bodies offer a service to credit providers known as 'pre-screening' that enables a credit provider to determine whether you are ineligible to direct marketing material about credit offers from that provider, before those offers are sent. You have the right to request that credit reporting bodies not use your personal information for this purpose. To do so, use the contact details on the websites noted above.

You might also have the right to request the credit reporting body not use or disclose your credit reporting information, if you believe on reasonable grounds that you have been, or are likely to be, a victim of fraud.
